The Impact of Jihadist Propaganda in the Russian Language:
Analysis of Kavkazcenter.Com

Abstract:

Since the fall of the Soviet Union, the Russian Federation has experienced waves of violent attacks and terrorism. After the First Chechen War (1994 - 1996), the Chechen Republic of Ichkeria, and soon later, the North Caucasus became a jihadist hotspot in the south of Russia, forcing the Kremlin in being engaged in a prolonged confrontation with local militant groups and terrorist organisations. Terrorist propaganda has been an essential element of recruiting among the young generations in the North Caucasian Muslim community, which since the fall of the Soviet Union, has experienced the rise of Salafism and political Islam. During the Second Chechen War (1999 - 2009) Internet played a vital role in promoting terrorist ideologies. Kavkazcenter.com has emerged as one of the main terrorist websites in the Russian language in support of Imarat Kavkaz (Caucasus Emirate) and regional terrorist organisations. Firstly, this paper examines academic literature, experts' analysis, and NGOs' reports regarding terrorist activities and jihadist propaganda in the Russian language to delineate general trends and terrorist strategic communications' influence in the North Caucasus. Secondly, the research focuses on the website Kavkazcenter.com analysing its structure, ideologies, and connection with the Arab-Muslim world and the international terrorist network. Finally, this investigation intends to describe the jihadist propaganda in the Russian language of the website Kavkazcenter.com whose activity represents a serious threat not only for the Russian national security but also for the entire post-Soviet space and the European Union itself where North Caucasian migrants and refugees live.

Middle East Politics:

Rightful and Legitimate Institutions or Terror Organizations?

Abstract:

Is it reasonable to label State institutions as "terrorist organisations"? This study aims to establish if a political party represented in a national parliament – or even a State or a Government as a whole – can be considered a "terror organisation", and therefore proscribed as such. Through the analysis of some cases stories, this research assesses the legitimacy – or the lawfulness – of some political institutions in the Middle East. The essay scrutinises, inter alia, the case of Hezbollah ("Party of Allah" or "Party of God"), a radical Islamic Shiite organisation based in Lebanon, and the Islamic Resistance Movement (Hamas), a Sunni movement based in Gaza, both backed by the Government of Tehran – Iran as a whole is also taken into account. To have a broader framework in the region, this analysis also touches on Turkey, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Qatar, and Afghanistan

After all, Rome does Pay to Traitors: The Return of Foreign Terrorist Fighters to Europe

Abstract:

After the alleged proclaimed annihilation of Daesh on Syrian and Iraqi territory, the return of foreign terrorist fighters to the European Member States certainly poses a serious security threat. It follows from the dilemma, for some member States a certainty, between the possibility of these, taking into account the "life cycle of foreign terrorist fighters", to be able, on the one hand, to pursue activities related to terrorism and jihadi violence – in particular, of recruitment, radicalisation, and new cells formation – and, on the other, the advantage (in theory) that once they are away from these radical and violent activities (and beliefs) may constitute themselves as a reference instrument, either in the prevention of radicalisation of new members or in building narratives that nullify the radical and violent impetus of Jihadism in Europe.

The problem, however, is that for some, this return cannot be made without foreign fighters being judged for treason (beyond the crime of terrorism), according to the laws of each country. They, therefore, advocate that when they have integrated the ranks of Daesh, they committed this crime and should therefore be judged in this condition – that of traitors.

We Intend to analyse the advantages and disadvantages, in security terms, of the return of foreign terrorist fighters - without forgetting the case of women and children (wives and children, widows or orphans) who still in refugee or detention camps in Syria.

In terms of counterterrorism performance and effectiveness, the role that these foreign terrorist fighters and their direct relatives may play, irrespective of their return in the condition of freedom or under the surveillance and/or custody of the Member State, is the basis of our analysis. Using case studies, we try to demonstrate that the possibility of "(re)converting" these FTF and using them as human intelligence sources (HUMINT) can also be a valuable auxiliary in counterterrorism. Paradoxically, in both cases, their status, in this dialectical terrorism/counterterrorism issue, will remain as "traitors".
