

This textbook is an introduction to the phenomena and processes of language change and variation in the English language in the past as today. The volume describes how English varies in geographical as well as in occupational/disciplinary settings; the aim is to provide students, who study English as a foreign language in mainstream courses in Italian Universities, the basic notions to better understand to what extent English differs according to the geographical and/or the domain-specific context. The textbook is for students with an intermediate/advanced level of English (B2/C1 level of the CEFR). Practice activities, already tested during lessons, complete each chapter and can be used during classes as well as for individual study.

Daniela Cesiri holds a PhD in English Language and Linguistics. She is currently Senior Lecturer in the Department of Comparative Linguistic and Cultural Studies at “Ca’ Foscari” University of Venice (Italy), where she teaches Applied English Linguistics, English for Specific Purposes (ESP) and Varieties of English in undergraduate and postgraduate courses. Her research interests focus on applied linguistics, pragmatics, the use of corpora for discourse analysis, metaphors in ESP and the study of ESP in different settings, domains and genres.

ISBN 978-88-430-7802-8

€ 18,00

Grafica Jumbles [Lussu] Trucco [Turchi]

Daniela Cesiri Variation in English across time, space and discourse

Variation in English across time, space and discourse

An introductory textbook

Daniela Cesiri

Carocci editore

