

GEORGIOS GENNADIOS SCHOLARIOS' ON THE DIFFERENCE OF VENIAL AND MORTAL SINS AND ITS THOMISTIC BACKGROUND^{*}

Panagiotis Ch. ATHANASOPOULOS

I. – INTRODUCTION

Georgios Gennadios Scholarios' (ca 1400-ca 1472)¹ *On the difference of venial and mortal sins*² is part of his ethical-pastoral output.³ In fact, the On the difference is a set of notes (σημειώσεις)⁴ composed for an unknown addressee.⁵ The text is preserved in more than twenty manuscripts, dated from the 15th until the 18th/19th centuries.⁶

The editio princeps was prepared in 1806 by Sergios Macraios⁷ († 1819),⁸ on the basis of an unidentified manuscript.⁹ In 1816, Prokopios Nazianzenos (born 1776/1777)¹⁰ edited a paraphrase of the text to post-Byzantine vernacular Greek under the title Διδασκαλία εύσύνοπτος περὶ τῶν θανασίμων καὶ συγγνωστῶν

* I would like to express my gratitude to Prof. Antonio Rigo (Venice), Assist. Prof. John A. Demetracopoulos (Patras) and Dr. Marie-Hélène Blanchet (CNRS) for their useful remarks. This research is conducted under the auspices of the TASTGCEP project, which constitutes part of the Thomas de Aquino Byzantinus project (see infra n. 48). This project (TASTGCEP) has received funding from the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme under the Marie Skłodowska-Curie grant agreement No. 703595.

Hereafter Summa Theologiae will be abbreviated as ST, I^a/I^a II^{ae}/II^a II^{ae}/III^a respectively; q. stands for quaestio, a. for articulus, arg. for argumentum, pr. for prologus, s. c. for sed contra and co. for corpus.

άμαρτημάτων,¹¹ adding also a phonetic transliteration to the contemporary Turkish language.¹² Lastly, in 1935, M. Jugie prepared the edition of the text¹³ on the basis of Paris, BNF, gr. 1289 (Diktyon 50898), which preserves an autograph copy of the text by Scholarios in ff. 130v-137r.¹⁴

Macraios' and Nazianzenos' editions lack any mention to the sources of the On the difference, while Jugie has traced only five sources, all of them Biblical.¹⁵ Yet, he remarked that “la doctrine de Scholarios sur le sujet traité s'accorde en général avec celle des théologiens catholiques”.¹⁶ More significantly, G. Podskalsky has noted that Scholarios has drawn some material from Thomas Aquinas' ST, II^a II^{ae},¹⁷ while J. A. Demetracopoulos has recently remarked that there are some parallels between this text and Scholarios' sermon On almsgiving,¹⁸ which is based on certain passages of ST, II^a II^{ae}.¹⁹ In the following pages, I will expound Scholarios' view on the topic of sin, in order to show that the On the difference is heavily indebted to Thomas Aquinas'²⁰ (1224/1225-1274)²¹ ethics,²² as expounded in his ST, Scholarios [ca. 1403-1472], Theologie und Philosophie 49, 1974, p. 305-323, here p. 311, n. 34-35) remarked that there are also parallels to ST, I^a II^{ae}, yet he noted parallels solely to ST, II^a II^{ae}, providing rather generic references; namely: a) On the difference, p. 275 sqq. (i. e. chapter 1, 19 sqq.) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 72 a. 2; q. 73 a. 2; q. 75 a. 1; q. 76 a. 3; b) On the difference, p. 276 sqq. (i. e. chapter 2, 22 sqq.) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 25 a. 1 & a. 8; q. 103 a. 3; c) On the difference, p. 282⁴⁻¹⁵ (i. e. chapter 8, 9-20) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 162 a. 7; d) On the difference, p. 282¹⁶⁻²¹ (i. e. chapter 8, 21-26) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 162 a. 4; e) On the difference, p. 282²²⁻²⁶ (i. e. chapter 8, 27-31) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 36 a. 4; f) On the difference, p. 282³³⁻²⁸³² (i. e. chapter 8, 38-45) = ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 35 a. 4 (cf. also A. A. ROBIGLIO, L'impossibile volere: Tommaso d'Aquino, i tomisti e la volontà, Milan 2002, p. 207, n. 22). Nevertheless, Podskalsky's references a, b and c (cf. supra) are false.

I^a II^{ae} and II^a II^{ae}.²³ Additionally, I will examine its relation to another set of Thomistic Notes of Scholarios, which has not yet attracted the interest of scholars,²⁴ namely the Necessary questions.²⁵ Moreover, given that Scholarios not only had access to Demetrios Kydones' (ca 1320/1325-1397)²⁶ Greek translation of Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae} and II^a II^{ae},²⁷ but also that he himself composed a Compendium of ST, I^a II^{ae} and partly abbreviated the text of II^{ae} II^{ae},²⁸ I will attempt to trace which versions of Thomas' text were on Scholarios' desk during the composition of the On the difference. Lastly, I will provide new evidence for its dating.

This paper aims to reveal another case of Scholarios' Thomism and thus to shed more light on the research of intellectual dialogue between East and West in 15th c. On the other hand, it will provide useful data for the inquiry into sin in the Eastern tradition, since to my knowledge a comprehensive study on sin in Byzantium is still a desideratum. At this point, a remark should be made for the reader's convenience. "Schemes" or lists of sins²⁹ (with several subdivisions) derive from lists of λογισμοί (i. e. those mental activities from which the relevant sins spring out),³⁰ which were conducted in the context of early Egyptian monasticism and later formatted to a “scheme” of eight sins.³¹ As known, Evagrios of Pontos (ca 345-399)³² adopted and further developed Origen’s (185/186-254/255)³³ lists of vices³⁴ into the following eight λογισμοί: gluttony, fornication, avarice, sorrow/despair, anger, sloth/acedia, vainglory, and arrogance.³⁵ Henceforth, the “scheme” of eight sins became traditional in Byzantine Christianity and was adopted by several theologians,³⁶ including John Damascene (ca 655-ca 745).³⁷ In the West, Evagrios’ list passed to Cassian³⁸ (ca 360-430/435)³⁹ as following: gluttony, fornication, avarice, anger, sorrow, sloth/acedia, vainglory, and arrogance.⁴⁰ Later on, this list was transformed by Pope Gregory the Great (ca 540-604)⁴¹ into the seven (capital/deadly) sins: pride, envy, anger, sloth, avarice/covetousness, gluttony, and lust.⁴² Thomas Aquinas adopts Gregory’s “scheme” of seven sins; still, in his ST he follows a different order,⁴³ the one most commonly used in his era: pride/arrogance, envy, anger, avarice, spiritual sloth (acedia), gluttony, and lust.⁴⁴

As early as in the title, Scholarios adopts the Latin distinction of sins between venial and mortal. This division is far too common among Catholic authors; yet, Scholarios' source is very specific: Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 (De peccato veniali et mortali). As will be shown below, Scholarios exploits this quaestio extensively.⁴⁶

On the difference*, p. 274¹²⁻¹³⁴⁷

Περὶ διαφορᾶς τῶν συγγνωστῶν καὶ θανασίμων ἀμαρτημάτων σύντομον καὶ σαφὲς

ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 pr.⁴⁸

Ἐφεξῆς θεωρητέον ἀν εἴη περὶ τοῦ ἀμαρτήματος τοῦ συγγνωστοῦ καὶ θανασίμου, διακρινομένων κατὰ τὴν ἐνοχήν.

Scholarios sets out by justifying the utility of his text: almost everybody lacks even the elementary knowledge of the issue at hand. Thus, Scholarios will exhibit the nature and the kinds of sins briefly and explicitly.⁴⁹ In this respect, the first issue to address is the attribution of the terms συγγνωστός and θανάσιμος to sins: exactly as some illnesses are curable, while some others are not and hence lead the human body to death, likewise some sins are forgivable, while some others are not and as such result in death. This interpretation of the metaphor derives from Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 a. 1 co.

On the difference*, p. 274¹⁹⁻²²

ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 a. 1 co.⁵⁰

Καθάπερ τοίνυν τῶν ουταφορικῶν λαμβάνοιτο τὸ θανάσιμον, καθὸ σωματικῶν ἀρρωστιῶν ἢ πληγῶν αἱ μέν εἰσιν ιάσιμοι, αἱ δὲ ἀνίατοι καὶ θανάσιμοι, οὕτω δὴ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν ἔχει, αἵτινες ψυχικαὶ ἀρρωστίαι ἢ πληγαὶ εἰσιν, ὅτι αἱ μὲν αὔτιῶν εἰσι θανάσιμοι, αἱ δὲ ἀφέσιμοι καὶ συγγνωσταί.

Εἰ δὲ μεταφορικῶς λαμβάνοιτο τὸ θανάσιμον, καθὸ λέγεται ἐν τοῖς ἀμαρτήμασιν, ἀντίκειται τούτῳ τὸ συγγνωστόν. Ἐπεὶ γὰρ ἡ ἀμαρτία ἀσθένειά τίς ἐστι τῆς ψυχῆς, [...] καθ' ὄμοιότητα τῆς νόσου λέγεται τι θανάσιμον ἢ λέγεται εἶναι θανάσιμος καθόσον ἐπάγει στέρησιν ἀδιόρθωτον δι' ἀναίρεσίν τινος ἀρχῆς [...]. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀμαρτήματα θανάσιμα λέγονται ὡς ἀν ἀδιόρθωτα. Τὰ δὲ ἀμαρτήματα ἢ περὶ τὰ πρὸς τὸ τέλος ἔχει τὴν ἀταξίαν σφιζομένης τῆς πρὸς τὸ ἔσχατον τέλος τάξεως, διόρθωσιν δέχεται. Καὶ ταῦτα λέγονται συγγνωστά. [...]. Κατὰ τοῦτο τοίνυν τὸ θανάσιμον ἀντίκειται τῷ συγγνωστῷ, ὡς τὸ διορθωτὸν καὶ ἀδιόρθωτον.

After this introductory remark, Scholarios proceeds to examine mortal sins. Such sins are those that corrupt the dual love owed to God and neighbour. Scholarios keeps drawing

There follows the introduction of mortal sin as a human action lacking love, within the context of the aforementioned metaphor, which ends in the following conclusion: as the body lives by the soul,⁵³ so the soul lives by love. In the same vein, as the body dies without the soul, so the soul dies without love.⁵⁴ For this reason, the entire divine law and the prophets depend upon the “two great commandments”, i. e. the commands to love God and neighbour.⁵⁵ In this respect, every law aims at the adherence of human soul to God, who is love according to the Apostle,⁵⁶ and constitutes the ultimate end and the ultimate object of desire. This teleological view of God derives clearly from Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 2 (De his in quibus hominis beatitudo consistit).

neighbour, since every human action is directed a) either to God or b) directly to neighbour and thereafter indirectly to God.⁵⁹ Such a view is built upon the Thomistic order of beings: insofar as God is the primal being, every sin against humans is subject to the genus of sin against God.⁶⁰ The criterion for identifying the quality of an action is love. This specifies an action as a virtuous one, whereas its lack causes the aversion from God (viz. the ultimate end) – undoubtedly a vice. Once again, Scholarios exhibits Thomistic views.

Once the nature of mortal sin is revealed, Scholarios sets out to define its kinds in chapter 2, on the premise that the transformation of a venial sin to a mortal one is in fact its transition from potentiality to actuality within the genus of sin. This is a Thomistic view exhibited in ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 a. 6 co. Scholarios' argument unfolds as follows: Given that every human activity may be mental, oral or corporeal, there are three kinds of vices (whether venial or mortal). The agent that actualises a potential virtue or vice defines each kind, e.g. the actions completed in mind are virtues or vices of mind. The same applies to the actions of mouth and body respectively. Still, every corporeal sin entails a certain oral one and this in turn a mental one. In the same vein, every oral sin requires a mental one. If a sin is complete in terms of its nature, it is a mortal one; otherwise it is venial. Yet, a mental sin can be either venial or mortal. Jugie has pointed out the divergence between Scholarios' text and the traditional Catholic view.⁶³ In fact, Scholarios' classification of corporeal sins according to the degree of their completeness and the relevant argumentation is based on Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 72 (De distinctione peccatorum). Yet, Scholarios applies this model to mental and oral

Still, the mental sin needs some elucidation. Therefore in chapter 3, Scholarios defines three grades of mental sins: the first grade is the birth of a sinful thought in the soul; the second is the fight of this thought against human mind, as the relevant passion⁶⁸ (viz. ἡδονὴ in Kydones' text) ignites this thought. These grades constitute a venial sin. The third grade is the consent to the actualisation of the relevant vice. This is a mortal sin, e.g. when a human assents to perform fornication. The application of this gradual model to mental sins, as well as the example of fornication are clearly Thomistic.

On the difference, p. 276⁶⁻¹²

Όθεν τό τινα τῇ ἡδονῇ ταύτῃ συγκατατίθεσθαι οὔδεν ἄλλο ἔστιν ἡ συγκατατίθεσθαι τῷ τὴν αὐτοῦ διάθεσιν ρέπειν ἐπὶ τῇ πορνείᾳ [...]. Όθεν ἡ τοιαύτη πρῶτον ἐν τῇ τῆς διανοίας θανάσιμόν ἔστιν ἀμάρτημα... συγκαταθέσει.

The example of fornication is further explained and followed by more examples: mendacity, blasphemy, pride, and envy. All these sins may be either venial or mortal, depending on the grade of actualisation of each vice.⁷² As a conclusion, Scholarios reiterates Thomas' theses:⁷³ a) mortal sin consists of the corruption of love for either God or neighbour, or both, and b) a sin is mortal, only if the natural agent actualizes the relevant vice in its perfect form.⁷⁴

Still, the relation of love for God and for neighbour has to be deciphered. Thus, in chapter 4, Scholarios asserts that love for God can be independent from love for neighbour. On the contrary, love for neighbour always includes love for God, given that it constitutes one of the divine commands. This view in conjunction with the allusion to the second command⁷⁵ derives from Thomas' relevant argumentation on the dual love in ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 27 a. 8 (Utrum sit magis meritorium diligere proximum quam diligere eum).

On the difference, p. 276³¹⁻³⁴

...ἡ μὲν ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ κεχώρισται ποτε τῆς τοῦ πλησίου ἀγάπης κατ' ἐνέργειαν, εἰ καὶ μὴ ἐν τῇ διαθέσει. ἡ δὲ τοῦ πλησίου ἀγάπη, κατὰ νόμον οὕσα, οὐδέποτε τῆς πρὸς Θεὸν ἀγάπης κεχώρισται.

ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 27 a. 8 co.⁷⁶

...ἡ τοῦ πλησίου ἀγάπη περιλαμβάνει ἐν ἑαυτῇ καὶ τὴν θείαν ἀγάπην, ἡ δὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀγάπη οὐ περιέχει τὴν τοῦ πλησίου. [...] ταύτην γὰρ ἔχομεν τὴν ἐντολὴν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, οὐα ὁ τὸν Θεὸν ἀγαπῶν ἀγαπᾷ καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ (= I Jn. 4, 21).

By the same token, Scholarios utilised this view in his sermon On almsgiving, 2, 35-39, in order to demonstrate the great significance of love for neighbour.⁷⁷

καὶ ταύτης [i. e. τῆς ἀγάπης] εἰς δύο μεριζομένης, εἰς τε τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ πλησίου, ἡ τοῦ πλησίου μείζων ἐστίν· αὕτη γὰρ καὶ τὴν εἰς τὸν Θεὸν ἀγάπην προϋποτίθησιν· ὁ γὰρ τὸν πλησίου ἀγαπῶν νόμον καὶ ἐντολὴν πληροῖ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ δὲ τὰς ἐντολὰς τηρῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὸν Θεὸν ἀγαπᾷ.⁷⁸

Accordingly, certain actions express only love for God (e.g. fasting, chastity, and prayer for oneself),⁷⁹ whereas the alms deeds integrate love for neighbour as well. Scholarios keeps drawing from the same source, this time from q. 32 a. 4 (Utrum eleemosynae corporales habeant effectum spiritualem).

On the difference, p. 277⁵⁻⁹

Ἡ δὲ ἐλεημοσύνη, καρπὸς οὕσα τῆς πρὸς τὸν πλησίου ἀγάπης ἀμέσως, οὐδὲν ἔλαττον καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἀγάπην πληροῖ, καθόσον δηλονότι καὶ τῷ περὶ ἐλεημοσύνης τοῦ Θεοῦ νόμῳ δουλεύει ὁ τὴν ἀρετὴν ταύτην ποιῶν καὶ ἄλλοις πλείοσι τρόποις.

ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 32 a. 4 co.⁸⁰

...ἡ σωματικὴ ἐλεημοσύνη [...] δύναται θεωρεῖσθαι κατὰ τὴν αἵτιαν αὔτης, καθόσον δηλονότι τὴν σωματικὴν ἐλεημοσύνην δίδωσί τις διὰ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ πλησίου ἀγάπην· καὶ κατὰ τοῦτο φέρει καρπὸν πνευματικὸν

Alms deeds are more significant than fasting, since the latter expresses only love for God, but not for neighbour.⁸¹ Consequently, when in doubt, one should choose the more virtuous among two actions, i. e. the one that expresses the dual love. In this respect, we neglect fasting and praying in favour of giving alms deeds or doing justice. Scholarios echoes Thomas' exposition of the conditions on which one may break the fast, in ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 147 (De ieiunio). Noteworthily, Scholarios draws from a. 4 ad 3, a passage that is not preserved in Δεῖ μέντοι ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις ἀνατρέχειν εἰς τὴν τοῦ ὑψηλοτέρου οἰκονομίαν...

Subsequently, Scholarios proceeds to examine the opposite vices under the scope of their aversion from love, since this aspect defines the gravity of each vice. For example, gluttony opposes love for God, whereas injustice and obtuseness to mercy, which are opposed to alms deeds, constitute an aversion from love for God and neighbour; therefore, they are more severe than gluttony. In other words, sins against neighbour are much graver than sins against God,⁸⁴ given that to Thomas and Scholarios, as already seen, love for neighbour includes love for God.⁸⁵

Scholarios justifies this a) by restating Thomas' thesis that love for God may exist independently from love for neighbour, while love for neighbour entails love for God;⁸⁶ b) by noting that reconciliation with God via penitence is much easier than with neighbour, because the latter requires the recompense for the injustice. In fact, Scholarios considers Thomas' doctrine of satisfaction⁸⁷/recompense for sin, as unfolded in ST, I^a II^{ae}, 87 a. 6 co. Noteworthily, Scholarios uses the term ἀντισήκωσις for recompensatio. So reads Demetrios Kydones' translation⁸⁸ – another indication that Scholarios draws his material from the Greek text of Thomas.

Ή γὰρ τοῦ ἀμαρτήματος ἐνέργεια ἔνοχον ποιεῖ τὸν ἀνθρώπον τιμωρίας, καθόσον παραβαίνει τὴν τάξιν τῆς θείας δικαιοσύνης, εἰς ἣν οὐκ ἐπάνεισιν ἀνευ τινὸς ἀντισηκώσεως διὰ τιμωρίας, ἥτις πρὸς τὴν τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἴσοτητα ἐπανάγει [...] . Ο δὴ καὶ ἐν ταῖς εἰς ἀλλήλους ἀδικίαις τῶν ἀνθρώπων τηρεῖται, ὅστε δι' ἀντισηκώσεως τῆς τιμωρίας ἐπανασφῆσθαι τὴν ἴσοτητα τῆς δικαιοσύνης. [...] Όθεν τὴν τῆς ἀμαρτίας κηλεῖδα ἀναιρεθῆναι ἀδύνατον, εἰ μὴ τὴν τάξιν τῆς θείας δικαιοσύνης ἢ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου προσδέξαιτο θέλησις, ὅστε δηλονότι ἡ αὔτὸν ἐκόντα τὴν τιμωρίαν ἀναλαβεῖν εἰς τὴν τῆς γνησιανής ἀμαρτίας ἀντισηκώσιν ἡ παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπενεχθεῖσαν ὑπομείνειε μακροθύμως· καθ' ἐκάτερον γὰρ τρόπον ἡ κόλασις λόγον ἀντισηκώσεως ἔχει. Ή δὲ ἰκανοποιητικὴ τιμωρία ἐλαττοῦ τὸν λόγον τῆς τιμωρίας.

Accordingly, Scholarios numbers cases in which injustice can be restored via satisfaction, and defines in which cases this is impossible. In the latter instances, a sinner may hope for God's mercy. Afterwards, Scholarios addresses the significance of alms deeds for sinners' reconciliation with God, concluding that alms deeds replenish love for God, but not for neighbour.⁹⁰

In chapter 5, Scholarios examines the criteria by which the order of sins is defined. As will be shown, Scholarios adopts Thomas' dual classification, i. e. according to the order of gravity and the order of cardinality.⁹¹ The chapter begins in a Thomistic flavour, as the introductory formula coincides with Demetrios Kydones' translation – another indication that Scholarios' Thomistic material derives from Kydones' text.

Scholarios remarks that the corruption of love for God may precede or follow the corruption of love for neighbour. For example, the aversion from love for God comes first in the case of adultery, since this sin is a kind of lust (luxuria), as is also the fornication. There follows the sin against neighbour, i. e. the usurpation of a husband/wife.⁹³ Each part of

Scholarios' argument echoes specific Thomistic passages; namely ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 151 pr.;⁹⁴ q. 154 a. 1 arg. 1;⁹⁵ I^a II^{ae}, q. 72 a. 2 ad 4.⁹⁶ On the contrary, stealing money corrupts love for neighbour first and consequently love for God.⁹⁷

For Thomas and Scholarios the first criterion for defining the gravity of sins is the worth of the abstracted good. Scholarios uses Thomas' text quite freely.

On the difference, p. 278²⁴⁻²⁷

Ἐν τούτοις οὖν ἀπασιν ἡ βαρύτης κρίνεται [...] κατὰ τὸ βάρος τοῦ ἀφαιρεθέντος, ὡστε δηλονότι μεῖζον εἶναι ἀμάρτημα ἐνῷ μεῖζονος ἀγαθοῦ τὸν πλησίον ἀποστεροῦμεν...

Moreover, the gravity of a sin may be defined by its effect,¹⁰⁰ i. e. depending on the object of sin. For example, according to the order of cardinality, stealing is a graver sin than insobriety. However, according to the order of gravity, insobriety is greater. Stealing is just the effect of greed and as such is limited only to the abstraction of neighbour's belongings.¹⁰¹ Yet, insobriety may give birth to every sin, as it causes an intense defect of mind. Scholarios' argument is based on Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 a. 5 ad 1.¹⁰²

Scholarios justifies this view by attributing every sin to a certain mental defect, when the mind succumbs to passion. This mental disorder may be intentional or unintentional. Still, insobriety is a voluntary act and as such it intentionally opens the door to every sin. Scholarios utilizes specific passages of ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 77 (De causa peccati ex parte appetitus sensitivi).

The chapter ends with Scholarios' comparison of detraction and murder. Although murder is graver than detraction (order of cardinality), detraction may be worse than murder in the case of famous people (order of gravity).¹⁰⁶

This comparison makes the transition to chapter 6. Here Scholarios addresses the circumstances as a criterion for evaluating the gravity of sins. In fact, this criterion is set in Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 73 (De comparatione peccatorum ad invicem).

Subsequently, Scholarios provides several examples, some of which echo Thomas' text.

In chapter 7, Scholarios turns to venial sins. First, he defines their essence in comparison to mortal sins, by presenting certain examples, once again on the basis of Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 88 a. 2 co. Noteworthily, the example of adultery requires the transition from an incomplete sin to its perfectiveness, as shown in ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 72 a. 7 co. and q. 88 a. 6 co.,¹¹¹ whereas detraction is a sin corrupting love, which in fact means that it is a mortal sin, as stated in ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 73 a. 2 co.¹¹²

A close parallel to this passage is spotted in Scholarios' On the Destiny of Souls and Bodies,¹¹⁴ 3, 1-8. Scholarios bolsters his argumentation by making a reference to the satisfaction of divine justice.¹¹⁵

Scholarios asserts that merciful God can forgive all cases of venial sins even without recompense – a view truly alien to the Catholic tradition on sin, as pointed out by Jugie.¹¹⁹ In fact, for Scholarios, forgiveness is possible through two sacraments of the Church, namely unction and penitence, the latter being able to cure even mortal sins.¹²⁰ Certainly, penitence is effective, if it includes contrition of the heart, confession and satisfaction. Yet, in particular cases contrition is sufficient, i. e. if confession and satisfaction cannot take place. On the premise of penitence all the goods displaced by sin, as well as the lost friendship between God and man can be restored.¹²¹ Given the extensive use of Thomistic material by Scholarios, one may assume that the tripartite model of penitence, as well as the restoration of human love for God derives from Thomas' ST, III^a, q. 90 (De partibus poenitentiae in generali).

¹²¹ For Thomas, the friendship between God and man proceeds via the three theological virtues (faith, hope and charity). In terms of Aristotle's classification of friendship into utilitarian, pleasing and virtuous, Aquinas' friendship between God and man can be seen as utilitarian, as far as humans aim to be benefited by God, and virtuous, since these benefits are certain spiritual goods (D. SCHWARTZ, Aquinas on Friendship, cited n. 22, p. 14-16).

Nevertheless, Scholarios had gained no access to ST, III^a/Supplementum,¹²⁴ as he remarks in his autograph note in manuscript Hagion Oros, Monē Batopediou, 254 (Diktyon 18398), f. 1^v:¹²⁵

Scholarios devoted considerable effort to track down a copy of ST, III^a and Supplementum, but the results of this research seem to be limited only to a few information about the contents of these texts. Yet, Scholarios mentions that his search included the libraries of Latins; no doubt, that of the Dominicans of Pera was essential (if not the unique

one) for his purpose, given that Scholarios had ties with the Dominican fraternity of Pera.¹²⁸ Therefore one may assume that the friars provided Scholarios with more information on fundamental views exposed in ST, III^a, as the tripartite model of penitence and its effect on humans.¹²⁹

However, Scholarios was aware of the fact that certain Scholastic authors had addressed the parts of penitence.¹³⁰ True, as C. Kappes has recently shown,¹³¹ here Scholarios rejects certain parts of Peter Lombard's tripartite penance,¹³² by reducing the necessity of confession and recompense in extremis, in accordance with Duns Scotus' Ordinatio IV, dist. 20.1.3.¹³³ In this respect, Scholarios underscores the importance of satisfaction/recompense as a basic premise on which the theory of Purgatory is developed.¹³⁴ Yet, whether he was also aware of Thomas' view on the issue remains questionable.

Afterwards, Scholarios examines the value of penitence as a remedy for sin's effects, emphasizing the need of satisfaction for the removal of its stain. In this context, Scholarios draws again from ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 87 a. 6 s. c. and co.

The chapter ends with an exposition of the diverse fate of penitent and unrepentant sinners in the afterlife.¹³⁷

In chapter 8, Scholarios addresses the capital sins and their kinds, following Thomas' order of cardinality. Scholarios sets out by listing the seven capital sins in the following order: pride, envy, anger, sloth, avarice/covetousness, gluttony, and lust. From these sins springs up every other sin, just as sprouts from the root. This is in part a verbatim citation of ST, I^a II^{ae}, q. 84 a. 4 arg. 1 and co., yet Scholarios feels free to alter slightly Kydones' terms. Noteworthily, Scholarios equates pride to vainglory in accordance with Thomas.¹³⁸

Henceforth, Scholarios exposes capital vices one by one, drawing heavily (certain times verbatim) from Thomas' ST, II^a II^{ae}. For brevity's sake, I will present just two indicative cases.¹⁴¹

¹⁴¹ For more concordances, see the Appendix at the end of the present paper.

The first example is related to the vice of pride. According to Scholarios, pride is the root of every sin,¹⁴² giving birth to disobedience, arrogance, hypocrisy, contention, obstinacy, discord, and desire for novelties. Scholarios draws partly verbatim from Thomas' relevant articulus of ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 132 (Utrum convenienter assignetur filiae inanis gloriae).

On the difference, p. 282⁵⁻⁷

...ίδιως δὲ ἀνίσχουσιν ἀπ' αὐτῆς [scil. τῆς ὑπερηφανίας / κενοδοξίας] καρποὶ κακιῶν οὕτοι· ἀνυποταξία, ἀλαζονεία, ὑπόκρισις, ἀκρασία, πεῖσμα, διχόνια καὶ νεωτερισμός.

ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 132 a. 5 arg. 1¹⁴³

...λέγεσθαι θυγατέρως τῆς κενῆς δόξης εἶναι τὴν παρακοήν, τὴν καύχησιν, τὴν ύπόκρισιν, τὴν ἔριν, τὴν ἐνστασιν, τὴν διχόνιαν, τὴν τῶν κακιῶν ἐλπία.

Noteworthily, Paris. gr. 1237 preserves the following list of the offspring of vainglory in the marginal note of f. 271^v: αἱ τῆς κενοδοξίας θυγατέρες εἰσὶν αὗται· παρακοή, καύχησις, ύπόκρισις, ἔρις, ἐνστασις, νεότης, διχόνια. Yet, as seen above, Scholarios lists praesumptio novitatum (νεωτερισμός / τῶν κακιῶν ἐλπία / νεότης) last, in concordance with Vat. gr. 611. This indicates that Scholarios draws material from a manuscript other than Paris. gr. 1237.

Subsequently, Scholarios numbers the offspring of pride and offers definitions of each one.¹⁴⁴ Moreover, he distinguishes four types of pride. This time he paraphrases Thomas' ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 162 a. 4 co., as G. Podkalsky has remarked.¹⁴⁵ Scholarios ends by restating that all the offspring and kinds of pride constitute mortal sins.¹⁴⁶

On the difference, p. 282¹⁶⁻²¹

Εἴδη δὲ τῆς ὑπερηφανίας τέσσαρα· πρῶτον, τὸ μὴ εύχαριστεῖν τῷ Θεῷ πρεπόντως ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ νομίζειν ἀφ' ἐαυτοῦ ἔχειν αὐτά· δεύτερον, τὸ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ μὲν ταῦτα νομίζειν, ἔχειν δὲ μισθὸν τῶν οἰκείων ἔργων· τρίτον, τὸ οἰεσθαι ἔχειν ἀπερούντα ἔχει· τέταρτον, τὸ καταφρονεῖν τῶν ισων, ἢ βελτιόνων δι' αὐτά, καὶ μόνος δοκεῖν ἀγαθὸς εἶναι σπουδάζειν· καὶ εἰσὶ πάντα καὶ οἱ καρποὶ καὶ τὰ εἰδη θανάσιμα.

The second example is related to the vice of covetousness/avarice. Scholarios sets out to justify the term “second idolatry”, attributed metaphorically to covetousness. To do so, he

In the same vein, Scholarios enumerates seven offspring of covetousness; namely, treachery, fraud, falsehood, perjury, restlessness, violence/rapine, and insensibility to mercy. Once again, he draws partim verbatim from q. 118 a. 8 (Utrum sit avaritiae filiae quae dicuntur).

On the difference, p. 283⁵⁻¹³

Scholarios concludes with some more offspring of avarice; namely (illegal) raise of prices, usury,¹⁵⁰ bribe, and theft.¹⁵¹

In chapter 9, Scholarios addresses the relation of some sins to capital sins of different genus. In fact, he keeps drawing from ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 118.

To support this thesis, Scholarios offers several examples, some of which derive directly from Thomas' ST. Specifically, murder is a mortal sin, as it deprives somebody of life, the most precious good of humans.¹⁵³ At the same time, this is an action against God, since it destroys one of his creatures.¹⁵⁴ Moreover, false witness, which is a kind of fraud, springs from covetousness, yet it is sometimes related to anger, envy or lust. So does perjury.

Scholarios remarks that the seven capital vices and their offspring can be cured by their opposite virtues and their offspring.¹⁶¹ The examples he offers fall mostly under Thomas' classification. It will suffice to present just two of them.

However, once a vice is committed, penitence is the only cure. This time Scholarios modifies the tripartite model of penitence exhibited above.¹⁶⁶ In this case, humility in spirit substitutes confession as a sine qua non for a true confession of sins. On the other hand, satisfaction is analysed to endurance towards temptations and mercy for neighbour; both of these “tasks” must be performed within soul as well as in deeds. The result of penitence is threefold: reconciliation with God, forgiveness of sin and grace for the penitent.¹⁶⁷ At this point, Scholarios’ analysis is complete. The text ends with a typical doxology to God.¹⁶⁸ fixer présentement".¹⁷⁰ Accordingly, F. Tinnefeld assumed that the On the difference has possibly been composed during Scholarios' stay at Prodromos monastery.¹⁷¹ Most recently, C. Kappes attempted a conjecture by dating the text ca. 1457-1460/1464.¹⁷²

However, Jugie's remark is much too vague to set the basis for dating the text. Moreover, Tinnefeld's and Kappes' conjectures seem to be mostly based on the fact that Scholarios' On the primal worship of God,¹⁷³ which follows the On the difference in Paris. gr. 1289,¹⁷⁴ was written at the Prodromos Monastery in 1458, according to Scholarios' autograph note: ἐν τῇ μονῇ τοῦ Προδρόμου ἐν τῷ ὥρει τοῦ Μενοικέως: ,Σѧξις (= 1458).¹⁷⁵ Still, the aforementioned note refers exclusively to the On the primal worship of God. In fact, the manuscript preserves Scholarios' works produced at different times and in various places,¹⁷⁶ while several works (including the On the difference) bear no relevant information. Thus, the connection of the On the difference with Prodromos monastery is not sustainable on such evidence.

On the other hand, Scholarios has divided his Πίναξ τῶν ἔμπερι εχομένων τῷ βιβλίῳ τούτῳ συγγραμμάτων in f. I^v into works before and after the fall of Constantinople; the On the difference is classified into the latter. This indicates that the text was composed after 1453. Yet, the text of the On the difference in Paris. gr. 1289 is copied by another manuscript, since it bears text written *supra lineam*¹⁷⁷ or supplemented in margine.¹⁷⁸ Such a case is not a unicum in Paris. gr. 1289.¹⁷⁹ To put forth an example, Scholarios' Excerpts from Theodore's Remedy for the Greek Maladies, preserved in the ff. 195^v-197^v of this exact manuscript, is a copy, the archetype of which was composed between 1443/1444 and 1453/1454 or (less probably) between 1439 and 1443/1444 as part of Scholarios' arsenal against Plethon.¹⁸⁰ Still, it is classified into the post-1453 works in Scholarios' list. Though, it lacks any specific information on the date and place of its composition, as in the case of the On the difference. In this respect, it is questionable whether Scholarios' criteria of classification include transcription or revision of texts, as well. Therefore I tend to accept 1453 as a terminus post quem for the composition of the On the difference, but with some hesitation.

On the other hand, the sources of the On the difference have to be taken into account. As J. A. Demetracopoulos has shown,¹⁸¹ Scholarios composed his Compendium of ST, I^a II^{ae} at a certain time between 1443/1445 and 1458/1459. Given that the production of this Compendium aimed to facilitate Scholarios' access to ST, I^a II^{ae}, it seems less plausible to assume that he continued to use his undoubtedly grand manuscript of ST, I^a II^{ae},¹⁸² if an abbreviated and much more "user friendly" text was already available. Yet, in the On the difference, Scholarios did not use his Compendium of ST, I^a II^{ae}, but a (still unidentified) manuscript preserving the entire, as it seems, text of ST, I^a II^{ae}. Consequently, 1458/1459 may constitute a terminus ante quem for the On the difference.

Nevertheless, one may raise the possibility that Scholarios returned to some Scholastic material he had gathered in his youth, given that he had gained access to Thomistic and Scotistic material very early, before the Council of Florence. True, Scholarios' interest in Thomas' works is attested already in the first half of 1430's,¹⁸³ and as early as 1436 or shortly after¹⁸⁴ he obtained a copy of ST, II^a II^{ae} (Paris. gr. 1237).¹⁸⁵ On the other hand, the first traces of Scotus' arguments in Scholarios' works are dated before the Council of Florence.¹⁸⁶ It was a time when Mark Eugenikos, Scholarios' mentor, utilized Scotus against Thomas in his Capita Syllogistica,¹⁸⁷ in the context of his preparation for the Council.¹⁸⁸ In such a context, Scholarios' use of Scotistic arguments regarding the tripartite penitence may be directly related to Mark Eugenikos' "conciliar arguments that satisfaction is not absolutely part of penance".¹⁸⁹ This in conjunction with the use of Scotus by both Scholarios and Mark as part of their preparation for the Council of Florence, may indicate that some Scholastic material used in the On the difference predates the Council.

On the basis of the available data, it seems more probable that the On the difference was composed after 1453 and quite probably before 1458/1459. Whether Scholarios relied on some already existing notes of his own on the topic of sin or he read some “new” Thomistic manuscripts remains a riddle.

IV. – SCHOLARIOS’ NECESSARY QUESTIONS AND ON THE DIFFERENCE

As shown, the On the difference is a “treatise” (a set of notes) on ethics, based on Thomas’ ST and amplified by Scholarios’ interpretation and examples. Such a case is not unique in Scholarios’ corpus. As has been pointed out,¹⁹⁰ another set of notes under the title Necessary questions contains Thomistic material deriving from ST, I^a II^{ae}. Strikingly enough, there are several concordances between the two texts of Scholarios.¹⁹¹ For example, the aforementioned Thomistic exposition of the seven capital sins and their offspring appears in Scholarios’ Necessary questions, as well.

Here are two more examples relevant to the vices of pride and covetousness, respectively.

¹⁹¹ G. PODSKALSKY (Die Rezeption, cited n. 17, p. 311, n. 34) drew a parallel between On the difference, p. 282 sqq. (8, 6 sqq.) and Necessary questions, p. 307²⁰-308³⁹, which is only partly true.

The astonishing coincidence of such passages¹⁹² indicates a relation between the On the difference and Necessary questions. However, both texts preserve their own Thomistic material, as well. For example, only the *Necessary questions*¹⁹³ preserves Bernard of Clairvaux's (1090-1153)¹⁹⁴ twelve degrees of pride,¹⁹⁵ as cited in Thomas ST, II^a II^{ae}, q. 162 a. 4 arg. 4.¹⁹⁶ On the other hand, the Thomistic argumentation on circumstances as a criterion for defining the gravity of sins, which is expounded in the On the difference,¹⁹⁷ is absent from the Necessary questions. This precludes the dependence of these texts in either direction. Besides, there are slight differences in the Thomistic text they share in common, as well.

On the difference, p. 282²³⁻²⁴

...ἡδονὴ ἐν τοῖς συμβαίνουσι τῷ πλησίον δυσκόλοις καὶ λύπη ἐπὶ τοῖς πλησίον δυσκόλοις καὶ θλίψις ἐν καλῶς αὐτῷ συμβαίνουσιν.

Necessary questions, p. 308⁹⁻¹⁰

ἡδονὴ ἐν τοῖς συμβαίνουσι τῷ πλησίον δυσκόλοις καὶ θλίψις ἐν τοῖς εὔτυχῶς αὐτῷ συμβαίνουσιν.

On such evidence, the connection between the two texts is rather loose. Therefore it is more plausible to assume that in both cases Scholarios has drawn material from a common source, i. e. the Greek translation of Thomas' ST, I^a II^{ae},¹⁹⁸ instead of speculating about a direct partial dependence of the one text upon the other. Yet, which text was composed first is still questionable.¹⁹⁹

¹⁹⁷ See supra p. 000.

¹⁹⁹ F. TINNEFELD (Georgios Gennadios Scholarios, cited n. Errore. Il segnalibro non è definito., p. 506) dated the Necessary questions after 1464, considering Jugie's remark on the source of Scholarios' Necessary questions (see n. 190 and n. 198) and the dating of Scholarios' Compendium of ST, I^a II^{ae} in 1464 (L. PETIT, X. A. SIDERIDES, M. JUGIE, Oeuvres complètes, VIII, cited n. 169, p. 19*). Nevertheless, such a dating entails that Scholarios could not have access to any other version of ST, I^a II^{ae}, apart from his relevant Compendium. However, this is not the case with the On the difference, as shown. Thus, the aforementioned assumption has to be verified. Moreover, if Scholarios utilized his Compendium of ST, I^a II^{ae}, the new dating proposed by

V. – EPILOGUE

The available data suggest that the On the difference belongs most probably to the period after the fall of Constantinople. The text is heavily indebted to Thomas' arguments on the venial and mortal sins as expounded in his ST, I^a II^{ae} and II^a II^{ae}. Certainly, the case of the On the difference is not a unicum; Scholarios integrated Thomistic ethics in certain of his texts, as the Necessary questions and the sermons On almsgiving and On fasting.²⁰⁰ Scholarios drew his Thomistic material from some undefined manuscripts, which most probably preserved the entire text of ST, I^a II^{ae} and II^a II^{ae}. Moreover, the Dominicans of Pera may have offered Scholarios material relevant to penitence; still, it is uncertain whether such material includes information on the Thomistic view on penitence expounded in ST, III^a. In any case, Scholarios' reception of Thomistic material is adapted to the needs of his argumentation. In this respect, the mode of reception may be an allusion, abbreviation, paraphrase or even verbatim citation in certain cases. However, Scholarios felt free to deploy, interpret or even adapt Thomas' arguments on the premise that the produced text will not oppose the Orthodox faith. Accordingly, he adopted Scotistic arguments in the case of penitence, in order to tacitly refute the doctrine of Purgatory. To the best of my knowledge, Scholarios is the first Byzantine author to adopt a Thomistic in core (and in a certain case Scotistic) hamartiology.

To argue that Scholarios' works need a new critical edition seems trivial.²⁰¹ Yet, it should be remarked that Prokopios Nazianzenos' paraphrase of Scholarios' On the difference into post-Byzantine Greek along with the phonetic transcription of its Turkish translation constitute peculiar cases of the indirect tradition (reception) of Demetrios Kydones' Greek translation of Thomas Aquinas' ST.

THOMISTIC SOURCES IN SCHOLARIOS' ON THE DIFFERENCE

J. A. DEMETRACOPOULOS (Scholarios' On Almsgiving, cited n. 18, p. 157-161, 167) transposes the terminus post quem for the Necessary questions many (or at least several) years before.

²⁰⁰ J. A. DEMETRACOPOULOS, Scholarios' On Almsgiving, cited n. 18, p. 134-152.

This is a list of Thomistic passages used in Scholarios' On the difference.²⁰² Given that there are continuous allusions to Thomas' text, the following list cannot be exhaustive. Enriching this list is up to the next editor of the On the difference.
